Hi!

AI and ML have fascinated me over the past five years. During this time, I've built a solid foundation in the field through studies alongside my work as a software developer in Automation. You can check my CV and LinkedIn profile to see what I've been studying. My goal has always been to transition into a role within this area.

Throughout my career, my analytical capabilities have been a key driver of success, as colleagues and managers put it:

- "Distinctive was his analytical ability and understanding of complex systems."
- "You think outside the box."

Fostering an inclusive team mindset is also a priority for me, and I dedicate substantial energy to creating collaborative and supportive environments. Feedback from colleagues highlights this:

- "Paul was highly appreciated by all colleagues, very professional and created a good atmosphere and well-being in the group."
- "Paul managed to bring about cooperation between groups within the organization (which is not easy in larger companies) and his network was large."

Drawing on the above qualities, I have successfully led and contributed to the development of test strategies across various levels, up to the Business Unit level. Remarkably, these strategies remain relevant and still in use after many years has passed.

I thrive on solving technical challenges—it's what keeps me motivated every day. My goal is to help companies successfully implement and leverage AI in every area where it adds value. As a bonus, I get to be part of the thrilling, fast-paced evolution happening in AI right now.

Why Volvo Cars appeals to me:

- Volvo Cars seems to be making great strides and setting high ambitions in adopting AI and ML across the organization, which is truly inspiring.
- I thrive in diverse work environments and appreciate cultures that value open and honest communication—qualities I believe Volvo Cars promotes.
- Having spent many years at Ericsson AB, a large global company, I bring extensive experience in navigating such environments, which I believe can be a great asset to your team.

I hope I have provided a positive impression of myself and my experiences, and I look forward to the possibility of meeting in person.

Sincerely,
Paul Ursby
